The new Business Instructional Facility is a landmark building, not just for the University of Illinois, but for college campuses around the country. It has set the standard for building sustainability in higher education. The $62-million facility changed design standards on campus, and is pursuing the rare LEED Gold designation. Features such as a green roof, photovoltaics and a displacement ventilation system allow the building to achieve energy cost savings that exceed ASHRAE 90.1 by 51 percent. Extensive energy modeling allowed the team to design a high performance building – a first for a public university in Illinois.
